Praise for Alemayehu Geda's Book: "Fundamentals of International Economics for Developing Countries: A Focus on Africa, Volume I, Trade Theory and Policy.

The contributions of this book cover the entire range of theory, methodology and empirical findings. In particular, the book offers a superb presentation and review of the fundamental theories of trade and trade policy; assesses existing methodologies for testing these theories and suggests modifications that make such tests more relevant in the setting of African economies; and caps these with several new empirical findings on Africa. I rate this publication as excellent.

The several well presented illustrations using relevant data and techniques as well as focus on African special situations constitute a major contribution of this book. I found the book to be of high quality and extremely useful to students and policy makers.

This is an excellent Book. I shall restrict myself to the opinion that it has the best presentation of standard trade theory (Heckscher-Ohlin-Samuelson) I have ever read. Further, the opening chapter of the Book (Chapter 1) on Africa's trade is brilliant. It is an honour to be one of the people in the list of dedications.
